FRANKLIN ACADEMY.

NEARLY A HUNDRED YEARS ago Joab Tyler, a Justice of the Peace and a leading man in Harford, was traveling over the town with a subscription paper.

The result was the "Center School House." It stood above the creek, and just below W. B. Guile's late residence, Harford Village, in the center of the present road. It was a pretty structure for those days; the pride of the neighborhood, as it nestled in a grove of hemlocks.

Here Lyman Richardson began his life work in 1817. He was twenty-seven years old. Coming to Harford from Attleborough, Mass., his birthplace, when sixteen, he possessed a good common school education and some knowledge of Latin. He was converted in the great revival of 1809. Aided by Rev. E. Kingsbury, he mastered the higher mathematics and languages, studying his Latin while heading nails in his grandfather's shop. Walking a hundred miles to an academy in Wayne County, he asked for admission, desiring to pay his way by work. Disappointed, he returned, and settled near Nine Partners' Creek and near Thomas Sweet, whose daughter, Charlotte, he married. A trace of the stones forming his fire-place can yet be seen. An uneventful life seemed before him. But no, a few years more found him at Wilkes-Barre, one year a student, three years a principal. Returning, he spent three years in the Center School. Strongly desirous of entering the ministry, these years were spent in study, after the teaching of the day was over. Far into the night. His course in theology was aided by Revs. Kingsbury and Hoyt. He was licensed for the ministry in 1820. Ordained as an evangelist, 1821. The bent of his mind appears in the saying of his father-in-law, "He always had a book in his hand."

The classics were taught in the Center School. That was the beginning of Franklin Academy. His pupils the first year were William S. Tyler, afterwards professor of Latin, Greek and Hebrew at Amherst College; Washington and Tyler Thacher, who both became ministers; his brother, Preston, afterwards an A. M., and others. In 1819, John Torrey, Edward G. Tyler, Willard Richardson (his son,) and J. Wadsworth Tyler were also in his school. Professor William S. Tyler says of him that in his memory of all early teachers this man stood chief; an indication of the enthusiasm and burning ambition of the founder of Franklin Academy.

Entering the ministry, the Center was taught by others. In 1829 Preston, an alumnus of Hamilton College, and a student in Auburn Theological Seminary, returned to Harford in poor health. The classical school was again resumed. Soon he removed to his father's house on the hill. Here, in a small, simply, but suitably furnished chamber, or attic, he began again classical work. During the administration of Preston Richardson the school, at first a wholly private, personal affair, began to assume the form and substance of an established literary institution. About 1831 one of the buildings, which subsequently passed as one of the halls constituting the Academy, was erected. This was christened Franklin Hall, and in after years when chartered by the State, gave the name to the school. During the next six years almost every month witnessed an advanced step of Franklin Academy.

A short digression is here necessary. In 1795-6, Ezekiel Titus, Thomas Wilmarth, Jacob Blake cleared the land whereon Franklin Academy subsequently stood. On Torrey's map, 1804, this land, 69 acres, is owned by George Follet. Caleb Richardson, Jr., had secured about 75 acres, southeast and east, and came into the Nine Partner (Harford) settlement, 1806. His family consisted of five children, Lyman being the eldest child and Preston the fourth. Caleb's aged father and mother joined him in 1808, all occupying one house. Follet's land became a portion of the Richardson estate, and a house was erected about sixty rods outside the Nine Partner tract, near the foot of the bluff. Here the aged parents died, and six years later the house was destroyed by fire. Caleb, Jr., soon rebuilt it. In this house, attic, Preston began his school. This old Richardson house is still standing.

Associated with Preston from 1830 was Willard Richardson, his nephew. Preston married Louisa Thayer in 1832, and she became preceptress. Preston died in 1836. Before this, Willard had been at Hamilton College. He returned, but after Preston's death went back to finish his course. Farris B. Streeter, who had been a student, became principal, assisted by Miss H. A. Tyler. Willard returned in '38, becoming principal, with Miss Tyler still assistant. Preston's widow, returning from Mt. Holyoke, took Miss Tyler's place, and Farris B. Streeter commenced reading law with Hon. George W. Woodward, of Wilkes-Barre. Mr. Streeter had been at Clinton Institute, Clinton, N. Y., before teaching at Franklin, and it is certain that for a time he and Willard were together at Franklin. Together they greatly promoted the school's prosperity. Rev. Willard, in later years declared that Farris B. Streeter's work at Franklin had never received the recognition it deserved. Some years subsequent to 1840 a movement was inaugurated to transfer the Academy to the village. The students greatly favored it. Mr. Streeter, who had just been admitted to the bar, was called by the trustees. He remained with the school some time, and quietly, but surely, turned the drift of opinion against the change. Had this project succeeded a severe blow would have been struck at one of the strong points in this institution.

The years following 1836 added to the premises many buildings, in whose rooms students boarded themselves and spent their hours of study; being called to recitation by classes in the chapel at the ringing of the bell. Susquehanna Hall was projected in 1837, finished in 1842. The ground floor was the chapel; the second floor the room of the two societies. The chapel was general recitation room; morning and evening devotional exercises; Wednesday afternoon exercises; fitted up with platform and side-door entrances. Surmounted by a steeple and belfry, amid the changes of sixty years this Hall still stands. In one of the corner stones are documents relating to the history of the Institution. A state appropriation for its erection was obtained by Franklin Lusk, Esq., of Montrose. Some assistance from the State came for a few years for other expenses. Otherwise the buildings were erected and repaired principally by those who had, at the time, the care of the school. A document lately found gives a partial report of money paid for buildings by Lyman Richardson: Franklin Hall, $400; Bradford Hall, $250; Wyoming, $400; Susquehanna, $724; Gymnasium, $50. Repairs: Franklin, $250; Columbia, $100; Bradford, $50; Susquehanna, $375. Sundries: Walks, $50; Wells, $100; Stoves, $330; Insurance, $225; Bell, $20. Total, $3,524. If to this list we add Luzerne Hall, Greenwood Hall, and Newark Hall, the list of buildings will be complete.

We may note here that in 1836 Franklin Academy was a recognized institution of learning in Northeastern Pennsylvania, having a charter from the Legislature. In 1838 the income was $1,000 a year. Says the first historian of Harford: "A number have been prepared to enter college. Some at Hamilton and some at Amherst, Mass. And some at Providence College, R. I., Some in leaving the School or Academy went directly to the study of Law, and some to the study of Physic, and some to the study of Divinity. A large number of both sexes have become school teachers."

Willard Richardson resigned in 1840. Rev. Nathan Leighton, a former student, was elected, holding the position through the spring and summer. In the fall Lyman Richardson was elected, thus bringing back to the helm the original founder. Professor Richardson was united in marriage with Miss H. A. Tyler that year, and both engaged in teaching at Bethany.

This Institution was located far enough away from village influences ($1\frac{1}{2}$ miles) to form a community of its own, where intellectual and moral worth obliterated the distinctions made by dress and wealth. It opened the way for a large number of youths dependent upon their own resources, to prepare themselves for any station they chose to occupy. A place where the agricultural and mechanical classes, by dressing as they usually did at home, and boarding themselves, could obtain a good education with a small amount of means. Few students attended under fifteen years; and being generally trained to industrious habits they pursued their studies with energy; put in practice what they acquired by teaching, and thus gained that indomitable perseverance of character and confidence in their literary attainments that manifested itself in the annual exhibitions, and placed many in influential stations in the community. Most of the students were at school from two to five years.

Rev. Lyman Richardson's connection with the Academy, beginning 1840, continued with some interruptions, to 1865, a quarter century. Rev. Willard Richardson returned in 1848. But Rev. Lyman still held the first place.

Catalogues were frequently published. That of 1846-7 gives a list of 43 ladies, 76 gentlemen. That of 1849 has 48 ladies, 104 gentlemen. That of '49 to '51 has a total of 135 for 1850, and 139 for 1851. That for 1851-2, has 243. In 1855 a very complete one was published, giving names of students from 1830 to 1855; a total of 1,483. In 1856, during the Normal year, one more was issued, with a total attendance of 179.

From these catalogues we gather the course of study:

(1) Classical Department.—LATIN.—Grammar, Reader, Cicero, Virgil, Horace, Livy, Cicero de Amicitia et Senectute, Cicero de Oratore, Tacitus.—GREEK.—Grammar, Reader, Xenophon, Homer, Demosthenes de Corona, Select Greek Tragedies.

(2) Mathematical Department: Algebra, Geometry, Surveying, Conic Sections, Spherical Trigonometry, Calculus.

(3) Scientific Department: Philosophy, Chemistry, Astronomy, Physiology, Botany, Intellectual Philosophy, Moral Philosophy, Logic, Rhetoric, Elocution.

(4) French: Grammar, Model Verbs, Telemachus.

(5) Belles—Lettres, Drawing, Painting, Embroidery, Wax Flowers, Gilding, Music (Piano), Music (Vocal).

(6) Arithmetic, Mental Arithmetic, Grammar, Geography, History.

The year was divided into three terms of thirteen weeks each, closing with an annual exhibition the first Wednesday of July. Students could enter at any time. Board per week, $1.38. Room rent per term for each student, $2.00. Expense of recitation room, 50 cents. Common English Branches, $3.00. Scientific Department, $4. Mathematical and Classical, $5. Students could board themselves for from 50 cents to $1 per week, and conveniences were furnished. The rooms had a stove; the rest each student supplied. All were required to attend to exercises in Composition and Speaking on Wednesday afternoon. Three Literary Societies were connected with the Institution, two for gentlemen and one for ladies, which met regularly

Monday evening for improvement; each having respectable libraries. A Lyceum for forensic disputation was sustained Wednesday evening. A flourishing Temperance Society and Anti-Tobacco Society were connected with the Academy. Public worship was sustained on the Sabbath, which students were required to attend. A number of lectures were given each term, with illustrations in Astronomy, Physiology, Philosophy, Chemistry, with a good apparatus. Study was required from 8 a. m. to 12, 1 p. m. to 5, 7 p. m. to 9. No student was to be absent from his room during study hours, nor after 9 p. m. Visiting between gentlemen and ladies was not allowed unless under express arrangement of Faculty. Each student was to attend worship in the chapel morning and evening. Certificates were granted to those sustaining examination. Signed by Lyman and Willard Richardson. Pupils were admitted at the age of fourteen. The tuition bills of each department paid the instructors of that department. Degrees could be granted. A library of 500 volumes, worth $400, belonged to the Institution, irrespective of the societies, and was much read. Buildings were valued at $2,500. All property, $3,100. Tuition income ran from $500 to $900. Other sources, $150.

The catalogue of 1855 contained five honest testimonials:

Hon. Luther Kidder: "From this small beginning has arisen the present flourishing University. No Institution can be found in our country, combining in a greater degree literary and scientific advantages than this. Young men of limited means stand upon the same platform with the wealthy."

Prof. William S. Tyler: "The Institution, in which, for the most part, I fitted for the Junior year in College, and in which, under whatever change of name, so long as it retains its essential character, I can never cease to feel a deep interest."

H. W. Nicholson, Esq.: "Your Institution has been prosperous and powerful for good hitherto, and in that prosperity and moral power I rejoice, and I doubt not, from the well known energy, ability, and reputation of its Faculty, it will maintain a high rank, as a school eminently fitted for the education of youth."

Hon. Farris B. Streeter: "I believe that school has been of more service to the country generally than any other Literary Institution within my knowledge. Most of the High Schools are exclusively for the rich and are beyond the reach of the industrious poor, but Franklin Academy has been peculiarly a school for poor men's sons, and the instances are not few of very obscure young men who have left Franklin Academy to occupy stations of comparative distinction and usefulness."

Wellington H. Tyler: "The time has not yet come to write the history of the men who laid the foundations of our town and its Institutions; the fruits of their labors are beginning to appear. The golden harvest will wave around those who shall meet at the Centennial celebration of the founding of Harford University."

On Prof. Willard Richardson's resumption of duty with his father in '48 he divided the school into two parts. A. H. Lung and Israel Brundage, both afterwards prominent clergymen, were made respective leaders. In '49 two societies were flourishing, the Amphycions and Alpha Epsilons. They were antagonistic in a literary way. Students chose their societies. There were both private and public debates. Their combined libraries numbered several thousand volumes. The Ladies' Society was denominated Philomatheans. Each society was to treat the other, and all its members, with courtesy and respect. When either society had four resident members more than the other it was to decline receiving members so long as the difference remained. Each was responsible for all spoken or published derogatory to the character of the Institution, the other society, or any one of its members. Records of the Alpha Epsilons, lately found, give lists of members, programs for exhibitions, questions for debate, and leaders. Many subjects came up a second or third time. Unfortunately, the points brought out are not given. But considerable heat was often manifested against the other society, and ridicule came into the reports of the secretary. Rev. Willard Richardson was equal to handling a tool that awakened immensely latent talent, but in less skillful hands would have "run away" with the Institution.

Each society possessed a banner on which some design, with name, was inscribed. The writer remembers that one was a painting of Cadmus, the inventor of the Greek alphabet, with a tablet in his hands. Under all, "Amphyction."

The years from 1848 to 1855 were very prosperous ones. Attendance was large; the reputation of the Academy excellent. The societies, besides their Monday evening debates, would, on Wednesday evening, engage in joint debate in the chapel. President Lyman Richardson was frequently chairman. One week to debate, the next to an exhibition consisting of declamations, dialogues, and occasionally a sham law suit.

Banquets occasionally enlivened school life. J. Bruce McCollum, now Justice in the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, was generally chairman and toastmaster. These occasions were a rare treat. They brought out much that was spicy and original in the student that might otherwise have lain dormant. It developed thought and cultivated a wide social and intellectual field that told for good.

In 1850 the Institution was chartered by the State under the name of Harford University. Its power was increased. But "Franklin Academy" is doubtless the more proper name. A name dear to the aged, especially.

F. E. Loomis, Esq., of Scranton, who has furnished (1890) several chapters of "Recollections of Harford University," speaks of the political campaign of 1852, when Pierce, Scott, Hale, were candidates for the presidency. He was then a student. "The old Wilmot district" was strongly Democratic, hence a majority of the students were of that party. Only three were Hale men, or "Free Soilers." Excitement ran high. Debates on political issues were the order of the day. The enthusiasm spread among the lady students.

The exhibitions of '48 to '55 were large undertakings. These were held in July, in open field, the stage only protected from the weather. The performances united talent in drama, oratory, and literature, much of which was original.

Says Loomis again: "One of the best exhibitions was in July, 1854. Great preparations were made by both societies. All the declamations were original and had to pass the ordeal of Prof. Willard Richardson's critical eye. Each society had its original drama, or colloquy as it was then called. J. B. McCollum was selected to write the one for the Amphyctions. It was entitled 'The Nebraska Bill.' Political in sentiment, it endorsed Douglass and squatter-sovereignty; and was full of humor, satire, and trenchant thought. The Alpha Epsilons had a numerous drama, 'Something for All of You,' written by Sargent W. Tewksbury. The great white canvas tent was in the large pasture of Captain Asahel Sweet. It was a sight worth beholding to see the people on foot, horse-back, in carriages, lumber wagons, wending their way over the various roads. The two societies fell into line, and with banners waving in the breeze, marched proudly to martial strains. Horace Greeley was present late in the afternoon."

The last exhibition held, the writer thinks, was on the brow of Farrar Hill, in July, 1855.

In 1854 Rev. Willard Richardson became the first County Superintendent, but did not sever his connection with the Institution. He was elected on the distinct understanding that he was to give one-third of his time to official duty, and receive $350. The new school law was making changes in many directions. In '56 he resigned in favor of B. F. Tewksbury, who was appointed to the vacancy. Rev. Willard Richardson returned to the ministry.

Rev. Lyman Richardson accepted propositions making the Academy a Normal School. Mr. Tewksbury became principal. He was assisted by Rev. Lyman Richardson; Prof. S. R. Sweet, Philadelphia; Prof. D. B. Chamberlin, Choconut, Susquehanna County; Prof. C. R. Coburn, Towanda; Prof. John F. Stoddard, New York; Prof. S. A. Terrell, Honesdale; Prof. S. W. Clark, Homer, N. Y.; Prof. S. A. Potter, Providence, R. I. The fall term of '56 had 179 names on roll. Superintendent Tewksbury publicly expressed special indebtedness to Prof. Stoddard and to Rev. Lyman Richardson, "whose great interest in the improvement of the teachers was constantly manifest." The students of this term were either teachers or intending to become such.

It is supposed that further operations were proposed on terms that practically put other men at the head of the Institution and left Rev. Lyman Richardson out. The arrangement was declined; and a Normal was established by Prof. Stoddard at Montrose in '57. He was a wonderful mathematician, and his newly published works were very popular. His "Intellectual Arithmetic" was a marvel. And Prof. Clark was the author of the system of diagrams in Grammar. The transition to Montrose proved of course an injury to Franklin Academy.

We cannot wonder that these propositions were rejected. Should the veteran teacher and founder relinquish his place for a subordinate one? Control might pass from his hands permanently. With all its improvements, enthusiasm, ambitions, he saw evils in grafting a Normal on Franklin Academy. The new school law of '54 was not popular in this section among tax payers. Was not the Academy a power? What need of a change? Education for a poor boy would be greatly increased in price. The new civilization of the school law put a glitter, a formality, a polish on education and society not in harmony with the traditions of pioneer life and the past procedure of the school. And the financial side of the question doubtless had influence. Lyman Richardson's income was never much more than a living. He resisted—with the usual result—that the new will supersede the old, rightly or wrongly.

The attendance fell off. But in 1860 it had revived again. The roll of that year numbers nearly one hundred. Then came the distractions of the war. Some students caught the war fever and ran away to enlist. The attendance grew smaller and smaller. The inevitable had come. Lyman Richardson was past three score and ten. Large money and fresh blood could hardly hope to sustain an Academy against the new Graded Schools and Normals. He closed his life work and the doors of Franklin Academy at the close of the spring term, 1865.

The writer's recollections of life there in 1860 would make a chapter by themselves. Nancy Sweet was leader among the lady students, and the parsing class in grammar was a battle-field of great interest. "Uncle Lyman" invited us to his sitting room the last evening of the term, entertaining us with several stories fresh in my mind yet. "Aunt Sarah" provided refreshments with her quiet smile. An excellent help-meet, a power in the school, a poet, a sincere Christian. Then there were the hours spent with E. K. Richardson, the dear friend of my youth. And lastly, the well-worn, old "cross-path," leading to town, so many times traveled over in days gone forever.

Many students in the earlier days have vivid recollections of their own methods of boarding themselves. Some would bake their potatoes on the top of a box stove, covering them with a small iron basin or kettle. Students have maintained themselves here on potatoes and salt at a cost of twenty-five cents a week.

In August, 1865, Lyman Richardson sold the property to Charles W. Deans, and November 7 the Soldiers' Orphan School began its first term. In 1868 it passed to the ownership and control of Prof. Henry S. Sweet, a former student at Franklin. In 1886 Prof. J. M. Clark purchased and took charge, and in 1896 Superintendent James E. Mathews became manager.

The older generation regret the setting of Franklin Academy, the putting out of an educational light of fifty years' duration. But the place is still consecrated to education; the magical charm is yet unbroken. An average of nearly two hundred pupils are yearly preparing themselves for life's duties.

To thousands the spot is hallowed ground. Who that has looked from this favored location eastward, to the noble hills, yea mountains, that seem to meet the sky, and has seen the rising sun flash his beams over their tops, can repress a murmur of admiration? So must that venerable principal have felt; for in his last days he once remarked that life would be worth living had it no other enjoyment than earth's beautiful landscapes.

Ten days ago the writer wandered about the old chapel. The interior is so changed as to be unrecognizable. But the outside is still old Susquehanna Hall. In the rear are dimly seen, through the paint, the initials of many students cut in the clapboards. The old bell has forsaken the belfry. On the second floor, where the societies waged hot war in debates, is the dormitory of the boys of S. O. S. The buildings, too, are changed through the grounds. The old willow is gone. Into the chapel comes no more the bent form of "Good Uncle Lyman." In that laboratory I shall never see again the dear "brother" (as we called each other), Prof. E. K. Richardson, who, in after life, filled high positions in teaching. Oh, so untimely, his taking off, just before he was to join with us in this last glad Reunion! But God doeth all things well. No mistakes in his government. But Time is ever writing these words:

"Passing away; passing away."

Three Richardsons were the controlling spirits of Franklin Academy during its life. They had marked differences of administration. A brief epitome must suffice.

Preston Richardson was tall, thin, erect in figure, intellectually mathematical rather than classical. Failing health broke life's plans. But with the intuitions of his New England blood, idleness, even though in declining health, was a condition which he could not reconcile with existence this side the grave. So he revived the classical school of his brother, Lyman. In his teaching he was opposed to any political or religious discussions, and especially any personalities that would create any feeling. Composition exercises were dull affairs. Seven years closed his work and his life. Unpretending, unselfish, unambitious; a gentle and lovable man; a Christian.

Rev. Willard Richardson was graceful in figure and movement; quick and decisive; effusive in speech; with an enthusiasm that was catching. He had not the tact and judgment of his father. He was a natural teacher and a born leader of the young. He was more deeply interested in the ambition of students to excel in composition, rhetoric and declamation, than in their becoming thorough masters of their daily recitations. He was connected with the Academy seventeen years, ten of which he was chief.

Assuming control in '37 or '38, fresh from college, Prof. Richardson awoke it from the prosaic life under Preston. In this he was ably assisted by Mr. Streeter, also just from an Institute, Clinton, N. Y. Mental Arithmetic proved a powerful lever, and greater freedom was allowed in composition writing. Prof. R.'s recital of the way this came about is humorous and interesting. 'Twas a bold venture. Wednesday afternoons became noted. Each student was stimulated to do his or her best. Exhibitions and colloquies became a finality. In a letter to the writer May 13, 1889, Rev. R. says: "Mr. Streeter and myself labored and worried much in working up the exhibitions, which were to Harford Academy and Harford, in an educational direction what Harford fairs are in an industrial direction. * * *. The Apostle Paul often refers to the Olympian Games of Greece, which suggested to myself and Mr. Streeter what these exhibitions would do to educate the country—to rouse it far and near.

* * * * Judge Streeter had a peculiar adaptation for the work."

Willard Richardson returned to Franklin in 1848. We have already dwelt at length on the seven years following. As first County Superintendent he met with many difficulties. Even conservative men thought he was working more for the teachers than for the schools. Says Prof. E. K. Richardson: "Willard took ground against mental qualifications alone as a test for teaching abilities; and was among the first to recognize the professional and moral qualifications of the teacher. Wherever he went teachers felt the need of being better prepared. He was careful in issuing certificates; and was quick to recognize the teaching ability."

Two reports as County Superintendent are in existence. They are able. Those in office today thrash over the straw, to some extent, of their predecessors. This man had a new field, a new experience, to report upon. But we can only cull one remark. It shows the man. "Mental arithmetic forms the base of our operations. With this we teach a child to think; we open his mind to conviction; we teach him to reason; we give him a habit of fixed attention which he can acquire nowhere else; it is the geometry of early life."

Lyman Richardson was of medium height; good bodily proportions; but bowed or stooping in figure; a deformity that increased with age.

Prof. William S. Tyler, his earliest pupil at the "Center," thus estimates him: "Lyman Richardson was not a thorough classical scholar. He was a self-educated and self-made man. But this does not mean in his case that he was not educated at all, nor made at all. He disciplined his mind by observation, reflection, and the best books within his reach. He was a live man, wide-awake, intensely in earnest, all on fire from his heart's core to the end of his tongue and his fingers with the ardor of his temperament and the fervor of his love to God and man. Full of enthusiasm himself, in the teacher's chair as well as in the pulpit, he was able to inspire his pupils with genuine enthusiasm in their studies. To him belongs the honor of having originated, and originated well, the classical schools which have proved such an ornament and blessing to his town."

Says Ex-Governor Carpenter, of Iowa: "I never think of him without a feeling of thankfulness that it was my privilege in my young manhood to know him. He was entirely absorbed in his devotion to the school; and his fatherly interest in the students, no matter how wayward and ungrateful they might be, has been the wonder of my subsequent life. He had a natural love of the physical sciences. He was an original and constant thinker. If he had not been driven to the field of practical affairs and daily work, he would have dwelt in the dreamland of the mental and moral philosopher. In his sermons and lectures in the old Academy chapel upon religious topics, he never apologized for his faith. He was not a mental or moral coward. I here and now, take him all in all, without mental reservation, declare he was the best man I have ever known."

Says Loomis: "'Good Uncle Lyman'"—as the students fondly called him—never had an enemy among all those that were under his instruction and management. To say he was beloved by all his pupils would not half express their affections for this kind and Christian man. While he was a strict disciplinarian, it was done in such simplicity and fatherly manner that all could not fail to see that his rules of government were for the common good. Of course there were students a little unruly at times, full of vitality, bubbling over; and in the nature of things must find vent in numerous pranks and antics. But he never punished without the clearest proof of guilt. No hearsay evidence would do. He was always on the alert, and what he saw with his own eyes was sufficient for him to deal with the refractory."

Loomis says: "Always on the alert." A number of anecdotes are on record, proving this. Actions of students that would not be noticed, ordinarily, caught his attention. Quietly the thread was followed up, and the consummation either prevented, or caught in the act. There is testimony to prove many sleepless nights; and no night when he might bid adieu to all care. And there were painful episodes in which the unprincipled, the degraded, wrought folly or misery. Truly, this man suffered as well as labored.

Says Rev. Adam Miller: "He possessed sterling common sense. Franklin Academy gained great popularity. Without greediness of gain, he was ready to subject himself to inconvenience and toil, without such compensation as justice might claim."

Thus in review stand the three Richardsons. There were others of the family whose lives, though less prominent were equally good.

Says Stocker: "No family that ever lived in Northern Pennsylvania ever did more for the cause of education, sound morality, and the pure principles of Christianity than the Richardsons."

FRANKLIN ACADEMY REUNION.

PRELIMINARY EVENTS.

At the annual Church roll-call, June 15, 1899, of the First Congregational Church of Harford, Pa., Pastor Manwell inquired whether the members would remember the centennial of the Church, June 15, 1900, or suffer it to pass by unheeded.

Moved by Watson Jeffers, "That we celebrate the 100th anniversary of the founding of this Church." Seconded.

Amended by E. E. Jones to include a reunion of Franklin Academy students.

Mr. Jeffers accepted the amendment. Discussion. Now was the time for a Reunion, if ever. The older students are fast passing away. The youngest one, in the last term, is nearly fifty years old. Many might be glad to attend both celebrations. Harford could better unite these occasions than make them separate.

The motion, as amended, was carried.

Aug. 19. At a Church meeting the following were elected officers of the Centennial celebration: Watson Jéffers, president; E. T. Tiffany, vice-president; W. L. Thacher, secretary; C. S. Johnston, treasurer.

Oct. 2. Secretary reported an examination of Academy catalogue. He had made a list of all whom he knew, and whom he supposed to be alive. Included in it names in the period of 1855-65, as he recollects them. Secretary was instructed to write Prof. E. K. Richardson for information as to students from 1855 to 1865. Rev. Manwell moved that a committee be appointed to select from entire list, such persons as would capably serve on committee. Carried. W. L. Thacher, E. T. Tiffany, C. S. Johnson, were selected. Friday, June 15, 1900, being the centennial of the Church, Thursday, June 14, was chosen for Reunion.

Dec. 4. Secretary reported receiving from Prof. Richardson documents from which he had made a complete list of students in the missing period, 1855-'65. Very much labor would be necessary to put it in proper shape.

Jan. 8, 1900. Committee reported the selection of nineteen students, and named them a "Committee of Franklin Academy students on Reunion." They were:

- Prof. H. S. Sweet, New Orleans, La.
- Julius Tyler, Ararat, Pa.
- D. C. Ainey, M. D., New Milford, Pa.
- Prof. E. K. Richardson, Berwick, Pa.
- Hon. J. B. McCollum, Philadelphia.
- Hon. G. A. Grow, M. C., Washington, D. C.
- Prof. E. S. P. Hine, Brooklyn, Pa.
- C. Heber Dickerman, Milton, Pa.
- Roswell Miller, Chicago, Ill.
- Hon. S. B. Chase, Hallstead, Pa.
- F. E. Loomis, Esq., Scranton.
- Rev. C. M. Tower, Oneida, N. Y.
- A. A. Eaton, Binghamton, N. Y.
- F. I. Lott, Esq., Montrose, Pa.
- Samuel Smyth, Pittston, Pa.
- L. T. Birchard, Birchardville, Pa.
- E. M. Tiffany, Hopbottom, Pa.
- S. J. Adams, Kingsley, Pa.
- Capt. A. T. Sweet, Harford, Pa.

Circular and list were forwarded to each in December. Responses indicated almost unanimous choice of Hon. G. A. Grow for orator of the day. Also that a "Home Committee" selected from the "Nineteen" would be amply sufficient for all duties necessary to a successful Reunion. Roswell Miller was the first to respond. And several letters afterwards. Valuable advice was given by Prof. E. S. P. Hine, Hon. S. B. Chase, Prof. H. S. Sweet, C. H. Dickerman, Judge McCollum, Rev. C. M. Tower, F. I. Lott, Esq.

Said Prof. H. S. Sweet: "I believe the two days will be a grand success, as Harford people generally succeed in their undertakings. I have always felt that I belong to the Harford people, and I shall be pleased to be with them in June, but would like to be excused from being placed on any committee of arrangements, as my health is such that I feel unable to attend to the duties of such a place."

He was indeed in Harford on these memorable two days, but too weak to attend either occasion, having suffered an exhausting sickness many months. Thus we lost our chairman, and his guidance and judgment.

Previous to this the Pennsylvania Commission of Soldiers' Orphan Schools had granted the request, presented by Hon. James W. Adams, member of the commission from this county, that the grounds of old Franklin Academy and the chapel should be given to the Reunion, for their enjoyment, June 14, 1900. They requested us to confer with Prof. Matthews, superintendent of Harford S. O. School, as to fuller and more definite arrangements.

The committee, selecting the "Nineteen" again made choice of a "Home Committee." From the "Nineteen," five were named: Prof. Hine, S. J. Adams, Capt. A. T. Sweet, E. M. Tiffany, F. E. Loomis. On suggestion of E. E. Jones that the secretary, W. L. Thacher, be added to that committee, it was so moved by Rev. J. P. Manwell, and carried unanimously.

With the formation of the above committee, the Church Centennial Committee relinquished all further control or concern for the Reunion. To Edward E. Jones belongs the credit of initiating and setting in motion the Reunion. Mr. Jones's father, Hon. Henry M. Jones, was a student; his mother, Mrs. Mariette Blandin Jones, a teacher in Old Franklin.

The "Home Committee," Franklin Reunion, met at Kingsley, March 3. Organization: Prof. E. S. P. Hine, President; W. L. Thacher, Secretary; Capt. Sweet, Treasurer.

Fully awake to the duties before them, the committee spent the whole day in earnest consultation. The outcome was (1) The publication of a pamphlet-catalogue, containing history, proceedings of the day, and complete catalogue of the 2200 students attending from 1830 to 1865. Secretary to edit the work. (2) Dinner free to students. (3) Engagement of the Harford Cornet Band. (4) Invitation to S. O. S. Band to assist. (5) Invitation and program to be sent to every known living student. (6) Hon. G. A. Grow for orator of the day. (7) Prof.

E. K. Richardson, the last living representative of Rev. Lyman Richardson's family, to deliver the historical address, dwelling more particularly on the closing years of Franklin Academy, and personal traits of his father. (8) An open program, having much time for social enjoyment. Hine, Thacher, Sweet, committee. (9) Engagement of a stenographer. (10) Services at grave of Lyman Richardson,—(a) Scripture, Prof. Hine; (b) Prayer, Rev. C. M. Tower; (c) eulogy, W. L. Thacher.

From this time to Reunion day the president and secretary worked unremittingly. Capt. Sweet was alert and ready for the numerous trips, consultations, etc., attending such an undertaking; S. J. Adams and E. M. Tiffany gave encouragement; and all three remembered the cash necessary to a successful Reunion. C. Heber Dickerman gave much needed advice before his departure for Europe. F. I. Lott, Esq., maintained constant correspondence on the details as they came in for action. Attorney H. M. Hannah, of Scranton, though not a student, took a lively interest in the preparations, and revised many names for the catalogue. Edward E. Jones was watchful to lessen the burdens of the secretary in numberless ways. Hon. S. B. Chase promised to be the orator of the day, should anything prevent Hon. G. A. Grow's attendance. F. E. Loomis greatly assisted in the negotiations regarding publication of pamphlet-catalogue. He revised many names, and published several articles in the Scranton dailies. We copy one:

"Fellow Students: The time is at hand when the 14th June, our reunion, will occur and pass into history. For the committee of arrangements, I urge you all to be present. Prepare now to make your pilgrimage to that Mecca that we all love so well, and worship at its shrine for one day only, with love and devotion. The broad fields on which the great exhibition of July 1854 occurred, when the assembled thousands were addressed by Horace Greeley, will greet you once more. The walks and grounds are there, but echoing not to the footsteps of the loved ones that have passed from our sight. But they echo to the tread of the orphans of the soldiers of the republic. Who knows but the departed may be with us in the spirit, and touch us with hands unseen, at this last reunion of the old students of Franklin Academy."

The president and secretary carried on a large correspondence; and labored unweariedly upon the proposed catalogue. The magnitude of this part of the work was very faintly conceived by them at the beginning. The complete revision of 2200 names, giving residence, occupation, achievement; the examination of hundreds of letters received on that subject; comparison of long lists sent in, with the originals; study of the numerous catalogues issued by Franklin from 1840 to '55; and the restoration of the years of chaos ('55 to '65) wherein only faulty lists were accessible; formed a task that neither would undertake again.

In Supt. J. E. Matthews, S. O. S., the committee found a friend, adviser, and willing helper. The annual examination of the school unfortunately fell on June 12 and 13. These are always days of labor, care, anxiety; alike to manager and employees. But all shouldered the added burden of another day cheerfully. The State Commission, remembering the importance and efficiency of Franklin in days past, and taking notice of the long list of eminent men, who, in student days, were at this institution, generously donated all provision for the large dinner. And Supt. Matthews would take no recompense for the turmoil, vexation, and care inseparable from such a gathering. He modestly asked for a small remuneration to the over-worked employees, in doors and out, who so cheerfully and attentively waited on the crowd of 400. The committee can never forget his kindness nor generosity.

The following invitation and program was issued in May. The students whose addresses were known, but had not been counted, exceeded the expectations of committee, and at the last, some were omitted, regretfully, because the stock of programs and invitations had given out. Four hundred were mailed. Some never reached the persons addressed. Others were overlooked unintentionally. It is believed there are 700 students yet living.

FRANKLIN ACADEMY REUNION.

THURSDAY, JUNE 14th, 1900.

We purpose a meeting of Franklin Academy's sons and daughters, on the old familiar grounds, on the above day. The institution was, in later years, known as Harford University. You are cordially, earnestly invited to be present, and enjoy the day with us. We enclose program. Each student will bring his wife; each lady student, her husband. We meet to look in each others' faces once more. To grasp the hand of friendship. To talk over old school days. To remember our dear teachers, especially Rev. L. Richardson—"Dear Uncle Lyman."

Dinner will be provided for all. Aside from this the Committee are unable to offer other accommodations.

We mail this invitation to every known living student whose address could be ascertained. We have also, through repeated articles in many newspapers, given ample notice.

We purpose a souvenir of the occasion,—a pamphlet-book. It will contain the old engraving of Franklin Academy, found on certificates granted by Revs. Lyman and Willard Richardson. Found also in catalogue of 1855. Next, a photo of the buildings and grounds today. Next, photos of the two above named principals. To be followed by a history of the Institution, proceedings of the day, and speeches. Lastly, a complete catalogue of the two thousand students, attending from 1830 to 1865, at which time the school closed. Great labor is being spent to make this list as perfect as possible. One line is given to each name; and residence, business, achievement, honor, will be noted for each, so far as we can learn. Enlistment in Civil War is especially worthy of note. Lady's name will be followed by her married name, whenever ascertained; with the abbreviation, Tea. if she was at any time a teacher. All students not living will be marked*. The whole book will number one hundred pages or more.

Will you respond to this invitation at once? Be with us if possible. If you cannot come, but desire a book, it will be mailed you on receipt of sixty cents. Address either president at Kingsley, or secretary at Harford. Make postal money order payable at either place, according to person addressed. Part of the book will be ready for inspection Reunion day. It will be plain to you why the finished book cannot be obtained until after June 14.

This is the last call for such a gathering. The youngest student, attending the very last year, is now fifty years old. And the earlier ones are rapidly passing away. A successful reunion will be the final cap-stone to the history of "Old Franklin." While we are yet on the shores of time let us do what we can for our "Alma-Mater." It will be a sweet memory when past.

E. S. P. HINE, President,
SUMNER J. ADAMS,
CAPT. ABEL T. SWEET,
F. E. LOOMIS, Esq.,
EDSON M. TIFFANY,
W. L. THACHER, Secretary.

AULD LANG SYNE.

We gather here, as friends, once more,
 Upon this festal day;
 Our hearts beat lightly as of yore
 We sing the ancient lay;
 We tread once more the paths we trod
 In days of “Auld Lang Syne;”
 Our grateful hearts we lift to God
 And seek His grace divine.

The sod we pressed in by-gone days
 By other feet is pressed;
 And other eyes have fixed their gaze
 On fields with verdure dressed;
 Yet memory with gentle voice
 Calls back those halycon days;
 And bids our willing hearts rejoice
 And utter words of praise.

How oft we heard the morning bell
 Resounding through the air;
 A sound we knew and loved so well
 Which called away to prayer.
 Can we forget that "grand old man"
 To whom our hearts were given?
 His words live as no others can
 And turned our thoughts to heaven.

What though the silver threads are more
 Than dark or golden hair!
 What though the brows so smooth of yore
 Are furrowed o'er with care!
 To-day we drive "dull care" away,
 We cease the restless strife;
 And though our locks are growing gray
 We'll make the most of life.

When favoring fortune fills our sails,
 And happiness is ours,
 We welcome the propitious gales
 And grateful, tread on flowers.
 Should sorrow come and come it will,
 For all that path have trod,
 We bid our wondering hearts be still
 And know the hand of God.

Should "auld acquaintance be forgot?"
 The fragrant winds that blow,
 The scenes of this beloved spot,

All seem to answer "No."
 No length of time, no breadth of space
 Can still that voice divine;
 It speaks though years march on apace
 Of days of "Auld Lang Syne."

JULIUS TYLER.

Regarding these stanzas a word of explanation is necessary. It was early resolved to have such a poem written. Prof. E. K. Richardson, the old Harford Band ledaer ('56 to '72), arranged the tune "Auld Lang Syne" for our present Band. At the end of the second and fourth verses, new instruments led the melody. Forwarding the music to the secretary he remarked that it "revived old memories." The audience, program in hand, were expected to join the Band and sing the words. Two persons entered the contest on the poem, Julius Tyler, '49, and W. L. Thacher, '60. Copies were submitted to Prof. Benson of New Milford, Dr. Hooven, Band leader, and Mrs. M. Jeanie Wilson, Harford, as judges. Two chose Mr. Tyler's and it was at once placed on program. Our quiet friend has here given us lines that will be sung more years than a century hence.

May 19, Prof. E. K. Richardson died. It was a startling and heavy blow to the Reunion. Besides his address, we had counted on his advice, and above all, his presence. For he was the last of the family; resembling so much his father, in features, as age advanced upon him. And this blow prevented our hope that Mrs. Harriet Ann Tyler Richardson, widow of Rev. Willard Richardson, would be with us. Although 83 years of age, she had thought of attending. The oldest living teacher. To the earlier students she would have been a veritable Queen Victoria, making a triumphal tour among her subjects.

The day drew on. Letters of regret at not being able to attend came in freely. Clarssa Tucker-Tracy, of Ripon College, Wis., 83 years old, Wesley Faurot of Kansas, James Osterhout, of Texas, James W. Belknap, of Colorado, Mrs. Augusta White-Decker, N. Carolina, are only a few examples. The notable point of every letter was reverence and love for "Dear Uncle Lyman."

The president and secretary must not forget the very many letters received, furnishing data for revision of names, and other assistance. Scores attended only to themselves or their relatives. But many sent long lists. We note and thank the following:—

Mrs. Melyina Case-Gardner, Mrs. M. B. Vosburg, Mrs. Nancy Morgan-La Grange, Mrs. J. N. Brundage, Mrs. Harriet A. Richardson, Mrs. Mary Bell-Watkins, Mrs. Walter Tingley, Miss Emily C. Blackman, Geo. B. Tiffany, A. B. Kent, E. B. Beardslee, H. N. Tiffany, Joseph T. Tiffany, Julius Tyler, L. T. Birchard.

And we do not forget the valuable services of Watson Jeffers and E. M. Watson on the finances, June 14. Mr. Jeffers was a tower of strength. Nor Prof. Stearns, who so cheerfully performed the not pleasant task of registering. Nor the half-dozen printers in the county who published our monthly notices. Nor Miss Harriet M. Johnston of Susquehanna, our stenographer, who so faithfully labored in reporting the speeches.

THE DAY.

The night preceding June 14th was rainy. Showers in the morning. The hopes of the committee fell to zero. But Franklin students were made of better material. At 9 a. m. Supt. Matthews telephoned: "They are pouring in here like the Fair Days."

The Harford Cornet Band was escorted to the grounds by the S. O. School Band. Prof. Bauer, of Scranton, teacher of both bands, arrived at 11 a. m. Prof. Geo. A. Stearns, of the Harford Graded School, attended to the registry, and decorated each student with the badge—"Franklin Academy."

REUNION OF FRANKLIN ACADEMY STUDENTS.

Thursday Morning, June 14th, commencing at 10:45 a. m.
Selection by Band on grounds outside of chapel.

PROF. THACHER:

Fellow Students of Franklin Academy, Ladies and Gentlemen: Our friend will introduce this Reunion with a few remarks, after which the band will give us a selection, and then the speech that Prof. E. K. Richardson was expected to give will be given by Prof. Hine, our President.

E. S. P. HINE:

Fellow Students of Franklin Academy, Ladies and Gentlemen:

No words of mine can tell how deeply we regret the unfortunate showers of this morning, but we rejoice that so many have had the courage to come out. We bespeak for you all a pleasant day. While it was announced that a set speech would be made, I beg you not to consider it as such, but just a few words.

It has been truly said that the sweetest gratification ever experienced by human intelligence is that which arises from the fulfillment of a hope long deferred. This bright morning, so replete with all the bewitching attractions of an ideal June day, brings to a great majority of students assembled here the realization of a wish and a hope that has rested in our hearts for years; a hope that some time we might be permitted once more to assemble on these grounds endeared to us all by a multitude of happy associations of student life; a wish to meet again and clasp hands with those dear friends who were engaged with us in educational labors, when Life's rosy morn grew brighter by Ambition's magic touch. Those were golden days for us. We could not forget them if we would. Each clasp of the hand by friends to-day bears joyful witness to the precious memories we so lovingly cherish of those days lived so long ago. Days when we felt the import of "To dare was to do,"—days when our hearts were vitalized by new and higher inspirations for our lifework.

Then came the vacation, as we exchanged books and lessons for the earnest, rugged duties of practical life. A long vacation it has been for most of us here assembled. Thirty-five years for the very youngest of our number; forty, aye fifty, and even more for others. A vacation that embraces the varied experiences of a lifetime. To-day we meet again. The familiar tones of that old bell will call in vain for many whom we would so gladly greet again in these classic halls. He, the beloved teacher, so enshrined in our grateful regards and affections, cannot be summoned from the peace and rest he so nobly merited. Strange and varied emotions will possess us to-day; Joy and Regret will accompany us hand in hand as we live over the past. But let us rejoice that an all-wise and loving Father has smiled on our efforts and permitted us to assemble to-day in a reunion that will furnish to each a brief taste of the happy past, and the memory of which shall brighten many an hour of our future journeying down the path of life.

Therefore, I beseech as many of you as are here present to accept joyfully the welcome so generously extended to us all, and enter heartily into the privileges of this occasion. I now declare Franklin Academy Reunion formally opened, and may the day be rich in blessings to all of us.

(Music by Band.)

PROF. E. S. P. HINE:

A very sad duty has been assigned to me, to fill the place upon the program that we thought was to be far more worthily filled by the son of our departed teacher, Prof. E. K. Richardson. Scarcely three weeks ago he was suddenly called to his eternal home. He was assigned to read a paper here to-day containing valuable information. We had hoped by searching through his papers to find something of what he had written. Only one paper could be found, and this may be considered dry by some, but to the most of us it will be interesting. We may surmise what he intended to say, but unfortunately there is no one qualified to fill the place. With your permission I will read the paper of our deceased classmate, the son of our dear teacher, about the last penmanship he performed.

"Rev. Lyman Richardson was a descendant of Stephen Richardson, who came from England about 1666, and settled in Woburn, Mass. The sons of Stephen were William, Francis, Seth, and Thomas. The sons of William were Stephen, John, and William, Jr. The sons of Stephen were Stephen, Jr., Caleb, and Daniel. About 1714 they all moved to Attleborough, Mass. Caleb was a soldier in the French and Indian War and a Captain in the Revolutionary war. Caleb, Sr., had one son, Caleb, Jr., The eldest son of the latter was Lyman, born March 20, 1790. In 1806, Caleb, Jr., and family moved to Harford, Pa. Aided by Rev. E. Kingsbury, Lyman mastered the higher mathematics and languages, studying his Latin while heading nails in his grandfather's shop. March 19, 1812, he married Charlotte Sweet and five years later started a classical school. It was at this school that Prof. William S. Tyler and others prepared for college. In 1820 Lyman entered the ministry, and continued preaching until 1840, when he was elected president of the school which he had founded and which was then known as Franklin Academy. His first wife died in 1837, and on Nov. 21, 1838, he married Sarah Storrs Kingsbury, whose memory is indelibly traced by her life of love and heroic sacrifice on the hearts of tens of hundreds. In 1850 Franklin Academy was chartered as Harford University. Rev. Lyman Richardson held the position of president of this institution until 1865, when the buildings and grounds were purchased for a Soldiers' Orphan School. Rev.

Lyman Richardson died Oct. 1, 1867, and Mrs. S. S. Richardson, June 5, 1883. Prof. W. L. Thacher, A. M., in his Centennial History of Harford says: ‘ Twelve hundred students came in contact with his life and daily work. Twelve hundred souls have had a vision of this man rise before them times innumerable, silently exhorting them to all that is pure, grand, and good in life.’ ” (Here ends paper prepared by Prof. E. K. Richardson.)

Prof. Hine continues:

With unspeakable regret we are compelled to announce that this brief paper just read comprises all that our esteemed, departed friend had prepared for his proposed “Historical Address” to be given here today, at this hour. All too soon the cruel summons came and deprived this Reunion of a valuable contribution compiled by the only person who, if living, could furnish such a paper bearing upon the unwritten history of this great school. Very startling, very sudden, and inexpressibly sad came the word, “Prof. E. K. Richardson is no more.” To your committee it was a great shock, as it would remove from our program of the day’s exercises a factor of interest that no earthly power could replace. To all here present he was a familiar integral part of Harford University; he was of the beloved family of our teacher; a classmate of many of us; a warm personal friends to all of us. Why, oh, why! was he taken so soon from duties that he only could perform? We simply know he intended to put on record for us subject matter of incalculable interest; facts relating personally to the life of his father, especially personal experiences as observed during the last twenty years of the history of this institution. No one was so well qualified to render for us this important service as the son, Prof. E. K. Richardson. How we would have valued such personal memoirs; they would constitute living incentives to that higher, grander life the great teacher so faithfully exemplified before us in his daily contact with his fellow men.

From the intimate acquaintance I was permitted to maintain with Lyman Richardson, especially from the year 1856 to his decline and death, Oct. 1st, 1867, I may be permitted to say, that he, in common with all other fathers, entertained fond hopes of his son’s advancement to a position of prominence and of great usefulness; especially this one hope most intensely and persistently was cherished, that the son, E. K. Richardson, should in time become the principal of the noble institution founded and fostered through a long course of years by himself, though planted in earlier years by a beloved brother. It was but human to wish intensely that Harford University might be perpetuated with all its noble history through succeeding generations with still a Richardson as principal. This worthy hope, though revealed to but few near friends, dominated the every-day purposes and influenced the entire business activities of the aged teacher through many years until the final transfer of these buildings and grounds to other parties. Harford University had won and proudly maintained a justly honored place, second to none, in the front rank of popular institutions of learning. It was pre-eminently the poor man's college, where a sound, practical education could be obtained by any one desiring such at a merely nominal expense. From humble homes all over this and adjoining counties came the sons and daughters of toil; the really substantial element for the upbuilding of strong Christian communities. Also from homes of opulence came students to this school, where peculiarly favorable influences opened equal possibilities to all. No wonder that splendid characters were developed and enthused by daily contact with that grand man whose pure soul moved by this one prime, constant motive, an overflowing desire to benefit all who came under his blessed influence!

Moreover, as a preparatory school for persons intending to become teachers in our public schools, it presented opportunities and facilities nearly as valuable as those afforded by our much extolled Normal Schools of to-day. Those of us who became teachers, though so many years have passed away, will very reluctantly, if at all, concede the superiority of the modern State Normal Schools for making strong, devoted, practical teachers, such as went forth from these halls to every part of our great State, achieving success and honors in this profession.

In 1858 the health of Lyman Richardson noticeably declined. Gradually his grasp on the labor and responsibilities involved in the successful management of so large a school lessened, and gradually the son, E. K. Richardson, assumed entire charge of the school. His ability as a successful teacher was readily acknowledged by all. The years, 1860, '61 and '62 witnessed a fair attendance of students. But educational conditions throughout the country were changing; various select schools were being taught in the towns of New Milford, Great Bend, Montrose, and Clifford, usually by teachers of considerable experience and of fine reputation, the effect of which drew from this popular school many young people who, for convenience, patronized their home school. The conditions induced by the Civil War also sadly impaired the possibility of sustaining Harford University with its former popularity and usefulness. A gradual decline was observed through the years '63 and '64 and finally the institution passed from the family name and became a Soldiers' Orphan School.

It is fitting at this time to give a brief sketch of him whom we all desired to meet and listen to his "Historical Address" to be presented at this hour. A sad and unwelcome duty has been assigned to me. I would gladly refer it to others to do. For years I knew him intimately, and, recognizing his many sterling qualities of mind and heart, I counted him one of Nature's true noblemen: one whose life work has made the world better for his having lived in it.

After a serious illness of one short week's duration, Prof. Edward Kingsbury Richardson died of pneumonia in Berwick, Columbia Co., Pa., Saturday afternoon, May 19th last. He was born in Windsor, N. Y., March 16th, 1840, and consequently had passed his sixtieth birthday. His father, closing his pastorate in Windsor, removed to Harford when Edward was six months old. "Here at the Academy he received his early education which became the foundation for that splendid superstructure which by years of application and study he so firmly erected." At the age of eighteen he assumed the duties of principal of this school, a responsibility made necessary by the impaired health of his father. For nearly five years he was a successful teacher here. He then removed to Oxford Furnace, N. J., and soon after accepted the principalship of the schools of that place. For six years he was a resident of Oxford. He then returned to Pennsylvania where he served as station agent for two years at New Milford, and became principal of the New Milford school four years. Resigning this position, he became principal of Great Bend school for four years. To him these eight years of professional life were extremely important, inasmuch as they were years of development along the lines of true educational methods. In an eminent degree he inherited the wonderful ability possessed by his father to impart knowledge to others, an attribute necessary in the character of all truly worthy teachers. Intensely he devoted himself to this one noble resolve: to become a thorough, practical, accomplished instructor of the young. And never did a man more persistently devote time and ability and opportunity to the accomplishment of a worthy end than did E. K. Richardson during this period of his life. In 1882 he became the principal of Hackettstown, N. J., schools, in which capacity he faithfully labored for five years, bringing that large school to a standard that won for it a reputation second to no other in the State. This field of labor was followed by three years at Stanhope school. In June, 1890, he was unanimously elected vice-principal of the Berwick High School, which position he filled efficiently until released by death.

Prof. Richardson was a man of varied ability. His marked resourcefulness made him a man of exceptional power and of usefulness wherever duty called. A friend truly says of him: "He could and did readily fit into every niche of public life and could smoothly adapt himself to any circumstances of private life, where duty required a man of skillful hand or of cheerful heart." No call of duty, or of philanthropy, no summons to Christian work, no message to serve his Lord, ever met with a refusal from him. But Sabbath after Sabbath found him a diligent worker in his place at the Presbyterian and Methodist churches, at the Union Chapel, and at the Y. M. C. A. He was an earnest and consistant Christian, ever found walikng closely with the Master; in all things bearing witness to his noble faith in the power of God's Spirit dwelling in him and directing all the affairs of his life with wisdom and love. The religious element became thoroughly interwoven with his being. This phase of his well-ordered character we may, perhaps, attribute mainly to the careful and consistent teachings of his sainted mother, the good Aunt Sarah Richardson, whose tender ministrations to us students even now awaken feelings of unspeakable gratitude.

As a teacher, he ever sought the moral as well as the intellectual welfare of his pupils, and thousands of young people have received from him words of kindly advice, of consolation, and of earnest encouragement. More than these, the influence of his noble life could not fail to be a vital living inspiration to those young minds associated with him, thus making the world better in character because of his life and example.

Emphatically his was a self-made character. In all his varied relations to others he never ceased to be a student, constantly observing and thus enlarging the bounds of his own information. His was an inherited love for study and for research. Only a few possess the knowledge he had grasped through years of patient plodding and toil to unlock the secrets of Natural Science. Especially was this true in music, where he stood as familiar as with the most common branch of education. Unswerving in his advocacy of truth and of right, he commanded the sincere respect of his fellow-men, to whom he ever proved a generous friend, as well as a kind devoted husband and father to his family. An honest man. A worthy son of a noble father.

The following brief facts may prove of interest to many here present, whose knowledge of the Richardson family of late years has been limited.

The subject of this sketch was the last surviving child of Rev. Lyman Richardson. He was born in 1840, March 16th. He was married to Mary Addis Smith Feb. 13th, 1867, whose home was in Oxford, N. J. To this couple survive two sons, Franklin and Frederick; also one daughter, Miss Nellie Richardson. Our friend was laid at rest in the beautiful cemetery at Belvidere, Warren Co., N. J., by the side of his beloved son, Eugene.

[During the speech of Prof. Hine, Capt. Sweet quietly placed on the platform an excellent crayon portrait of Rev. Lyman Richardson. It was the work and gift of Miss Jennie Leslie of Harford.]

Music by Soldier's Orphan School Band.

(Here followed social reunion until 12:20 o'clock.)

Music by Band.

Dinner served by Supt. Matthews, at which all the students of Franklin Academy in attendance participated. Two hundred and fifty persons sat down together. The student's wife, the lady student's husband were included. It was not intended one should be overlooked. It is believed none were.

Roast beef, mashed potato, peas, onions, bread, butter, pie, tea, coffee, constituted the bill of fare. All were satisfied. Many pronounced it very enjoyable, and some expressed personal thanks to Supt. Matthews. Nothing in the nature of a banquet was at all intended.

It was impossible for Supt. Matthews to again reset the tables. The remainder of the crowd, not students, probably one hundred, were provided with lunch by Mr. Hartweg, baker, under direction of Supt. Matthews. This dinner, this lunch, was the gift of the State Commission of S. O. Schools.

Afternoon session called at 2 p. m. A heavy shower took place soon after.

Five minute speeches.

JUSTICE McCOLLUM:

Against all expectations I have been invited to say something, and yet to be here is a pleasure, and I came here because I wanted to revive old associations, conscious at the time that I must miss many of those associates. My old associates of fifty years ago, they were all that I sought, all that I expected to meet, and they have no right to expect of me in these days anything in the way of an able address. I don't know that I ever had any particular faculty in that direction; but I must say what little I did have has fled from me in the twenty-two years' service.

My first connection with the school here was in 1849. We had selected a room in this building, in the old chapel. We occupied it together. We brought the most of our provisions from our homes. Our expenses were extremely light; and I confess that it was one of the pleasantest eras in my life. I soon came to know that in this school, conducted by the Richardsons

(and in speaking in that manner I mean Uncle Lyman Richardson and Willard Richardson), I was attending an institution where all were upon an equality; that one was as good as the other at all times, under the tutorage of these men. Upon all occasions they stood upon the uniform basis; the common equality was recognized; and I can't help but think that it always was one of the charming features in the conduct of this school.

Now, ladies and gentlemen, I am very sorry that I am not in a stage to talk on this occasion so as to be of any interest and satisfaction. I respond briefly to what has been requested of me, but as I said to my friends here, I am before you a few moments and no more; that I was in no condition and under no expectation of attempting to entertain this people. I am glad to hear others entertain, and I am glad to be here and to participate in the entertainment that is provided.

S. B. CHASE:

Mr. President and Fellow Students: I should not have known how long it was since I was a student at this institution and drank at the educational table of Uncle Lyman, only for the fact that I found among my papers some copies of the "Literary Emporium," which I edited while rooming in what we called Luzerne Hall then. I am unable to find it now. And in this paper, for I had them for a year published semi-monthly, I found some very interesting reminiscences, and if there are any present that were attending here when I was a student they, perhaps, will recollect some of its incidents.

At one of the exhibitions—annual exhibitions I think—at the close of 1845—for that was my first year at Franklin Academy—I wrote, in connection with my cousin, E. B. Chase, a colloquy consisting of a Democratic convention, supposed to be in Susquehanna county. We had our delegates regularly credentialed, had our office in the convention, and went through with all the formula which some of the friends of my age may recollect was incident to the good old Democratic conventions, when the other party was called the Whig party. I read that colloquy the other day with a great deal of interest; first, because it represented somewhat of the political questions of that day in its discussions; but I was more interested in something that we omitted in that colloquy in the proceedings of that convention. I did not find that we had a lot of men paid for the purpose of doing the cheering during the convention. Not very long ago in Easton at a Republican convention there was a certain Republican leader that engaged seventy-five men and paid their per diem expenses to the place where the convention was held for the purpose of what they called "rooting," and they called the men "rooters." Now, it is a sad departure from the good old days of '45 when we edited the "Franklin Democrat"; for we never heard of "rooters" at a political convention, nor did we need them. If any of you recollect a mass meeting that was held in Montrose during the campaign of Fremont, when the masses poured in from every road leading from different parts of the county into Montrose with teams, some consisting of twenty-six yoke of oxen, and ladies representing every State (one for Kansas, too.); if any of you attended that convention and saw the demonstration that went out from it, you can very well conceive that they didn't need any "rooters" to make applause; and that was because there were principles underlying our actions, and everything was spontaneous and came from the heart. And so I say that that was omitted from our colloquy.

There was a new feature that appeared in this "Literary Emporium"; our friend Uncle Lyman had inaugurated a system of social parties. Now, ordinarily, a party is made up of gentlemen and ladies that come of their own volition. But the rule that was established on that occasion, or during that term was that a committee of six were appointed, three ladies and three gentlemen, to assign or apportion the gentlemen and ladies that should attend those parties; that is, they would take a paper and put down S. B. Chase, and opposite his name such a lady as they desired him to take; and the first that the lady knew about this would be that she received an invitation or direction from the committee that she was to go with such a person, and if she did not send the person to whom she was assigned a declination she would be called upon by that gentleman to take her to the party on a set evening. If there are any of my friends who were students at that time, they will recollect some of these parties, as I find in this paper.

Those were pleasant days, and the foundation during those weeks and years was laid for worthy, healthy sentiment throughout all this region. We are very proud of the results of the teaching of Franklin Academy. We sit here and listen to a brother who will soon be chief justice of this State, the highest position that a person can occupy in the legal profession of this State. Many others have served in other paths of honor. And beyond this there was a sentiment laid, I may say a virtuous sentiment, a sentiment that inclined people to act in accordance with their feelings of right. We have reason to congratulate ourselves that we lived at a time when we could attend Franklin Academy, and we may congratulate the present directors that are carrying on this work; congratulate them that they are now reflecting and acting out the sentiments that have been instilled into them by their fathers and grandfathers who were permitted to enjoy the privileges of this institution.

REV. P. R. TOWER:

I am very happy to be here, friends, this afternoon, and as I have not recovered from that native bashfulness that was mine when I was here as a student, and so being called upon unexpectedly, you will please not do as they used to do when I got on the stage; that is, laugh. There are some here this afternoon that used to do that; and to my recollection and my honest conviction they used to enjoy it. The reminiscence concerning that political convention reminds me of a colloquy written by S. W. Tewksbury that was acted on the foundation of a barn out here. It was my unfortunate business to carry off a man a good deal larger than I was then, and I guess as large as I am now, on a rail. Now, I have lived in several towns and I never have helped to carry any one out on a rail except at Franklin Academy, and I wouldn't have done it then but they selected me to do it. I suppose they thought I would do whatever was set before me, if it was a little unpleasant. I wish I could give the name of that colloquy. It was the one in which Lamb (R. G. I think it was) was the clown; out on the ranch in the West.

I have enjoyed this immensely. Last week or the week before I shook hands with I don't know how many hundred old soldiers on the field of Gettysburg. God has written on that field the same as he wrote the commandments on the tables of stone, and this nation will never know the time when that history will be rubbed out. And to-day I have taken the hand of so many that I used to know whom I couldn't call by name, that I have been exceedingly thrilled. I shall go from this place remembering this scene. This day and these faces will come back to me. I am glad of this privilege of looking all of you in the face, and I bid you good day.

SAMUEL SMYTH (By Letter);

I wish Henry W. Williams could be with us to-day. The last time I met him in Harford, ten years ago, at the town's centennial celebration, he was so full of emotion that the tears were on his cheeks when we met unexpectedly, recognized and called each other by our Christian names, Henry and Sam. He said, "Isn't this glorious! It is like a little resurrection."

Let each and every one of us be really and truly Franklin Academy students again for a few hours. Could anything be more enjoyable? It only requires a little imagination, some invention, and lots of romance. To represent a party of Franklin students of fifty years ago, we must be young, healthy, robust, hearty, honest, good-natured, obliging, kind, generous, good in every way. It seems to me that I would be willing to give a dollar a minute if I could put this old soul of mine into the body of the boy who bore that same name and used to run around here forty-five years ago. It would be worth a dollar just to give one jump, turn a hand-spring, and stand on my head once. It would be worth two dollars to give just one yell that could be heard over to Loren Farrar's.

Anything relating to Franklin Academy without Uncle Lyman Richardson would be like playing Hamlet with the Prince of Denmark left out. I never have had an opportunity before, and will not again, of paying my little tribute to the memory of that good man. There are many great men, but good men are scarce. Comparing him with men in general, I have no hesitation in saying, especially in this company, that there was no better. I need not enumerate his virtues; it would exhaust my vocabulary. Of faults, I know of none—not one. His was often a trying position. Principal of an Academy accommodating many young people of both sexes, abounding in health and high spirits, mischief was prominent at times, as might have been expected, and it called for all his patience, tact, and wisdom to maintain good order and the good reputation of the institution, of which he was very jealous.

SAMUEL OAKLEY:

Ladies and Gentlemen and Fellow Students: As the time is short, I will be brief in my remarks. As I look over this assembly, I see a number of the old students that were my classmates, and the old familiar faces that are near and dear to me, especially some of these old girls. You were young girls then. I have met quite a number to-day that I couldn't recognize. I'll tell you what is the trouble: you have been associating with old Father Time, and he has made havoc with your comely forms and silken tresses. Those tresses are tinged with gray, and the elastic step has lost its elasticity. And another thing, that is, you have grown old, but not only old but homely. I suppose if I should take a lingering look in the mirror, which I dasn't do, I would see that I had grown old and homely. The Lord only knows how I could grow homely. When I was a boy and was so homely my mother and father used to say, "Oh, he will outgrow it." Then I read in the physiology that a man changes every seven years. Says I, "Face and all." It says, "Yes." Eight of those conservative periods have passed and I am lugging round the same face still. I tell you when homeliness comes on you it will stick to you like burdocks on a woman's knitting, and

As I stand before this audience "en masse,"
I see many students that formed my class;
Which awakens to memory the long, long past,
When Uncle Lyman shook his head and whispered.

His exemplary life we can praise and laud,
Though all that is mortal lies beneath the sod.
You may think this expression rather odd:
"Uncle Lyman shakes his head and whispers."

We all form habits in our mortal lives
And we express those habits in sorrow or surprise;
They will ever cling to one until he dies.

Uncle Lyman shakes his head and whispers.

I can see him now sitting on the stage
Reading a chapter from the Inspired Page,
And then in humble devotion engaged.
Then after, shake his head and whisper.

There is not an old student but what remembers,
In the morning worship where we all assembled,
Some poor student for misdemeanor sat and trembled;
For Uncle Lyman shakes his head and whispers.

Something, we know, is certainly wrong,
For discordant is the worship of prayer and song.
The secret of the matter will not be kept long;
Still Uncle Lyman shakes his head and whispers.

The secret of the matter becomes intense;
For days, perhaps, we are kept in suspense,
From knowing what student committed the offence;
Still Uncle Lyman shakes his head and whispers.

The students were up to all kinds of tricks,
From stealing eggs to full grown chicks;
They would catch it in worship at half-past six,
For Uncle Lyman shakes his head and whispers.

Roasting the green corn, hunting the coon,
At the midnight hour by the light of the moon,
Or sitting cosily in some lady's room;
Ah! Uncle Lyman shakes his head and whispers.

Or some autumn evening a neighbor would catch
A half dozen students in his watermelon patch;
A report to headquarters quickly despatched
Makes Uncle Lyman shake his head and whisper.

In a neighbor's barn not far away
 On an old ox-cart stood a load of hay;
 It was astride the peak at the break of day;
 Uncle Lyman shakes his head and whispers.

Now a scheme he planned for the guilty ones;
 He commenced this way, as it were, throwing stones;
 But in the final result there were no broken bones;
 Still Uncle Lyman shakes his head and whispers.

"Now I want all the students that didn't take part,
 To assist me this morning in replacing the cart."
 Every student responded with all his heart;
 Uncle Lyman shook his head and whispered.

The cart and the hay were soon taken down,
 Each working faithful till 'twas safe on the ground;
 And the guilty parties he never found;
 He shook his head and whispered.

If he could to-day appear on this scene
 With a mind so vast, so shrewd, so keen,
 He would make a selection of the students so mean
 And shake his head and whisper.

Or should we ask him to return
 To this mortal existence from the mouldering urn,
 And take charge of these students to instruct and learn,
 He would shake his head and whisper.

Dear fellow-students, now I am through;
 I bid you farewell, farewell, adieu;
 I wrote this as a reminder to each one of you,
 How Uncle Lyman shook his head and whispered.

F. E. LOOMIS:

Ladies and Gentlemen, Fellow Students of Old Franklin Academy: It gives me great pleasure upon this occasion to see so many of my friends. We have all looked forward to this time, and yet it is with profound emotion that I address you upon this occasion, because I recall many most glorious names that are not with us. I attended school here at first in 1851; I was here in '52, '53 and '54. One of my fellow students was my friend, J. B. McCollum of the Supreme Bench of Pennsylvania. He was with me. I am proud of the Alumni of this institution. When I think of the place filled by Franklin Academy from its inception in 1830 to its close in 1865, I say I am proud of it. It was the great school for Northeastern Pennsylvania. Students came even from the other states, and, in fact, from all parts of this great State, to attend school; and I feel for one, when I think of the many students, what this great school did for them. True, when we contrast the school we attended with the facilities that other schools afford, of course we suffer by the contrast as it were. They are much ahead of us. But when I think what this school has done through its two great societies, the Amphyction and Alpha Epsilon, by their annual exhibitions, their private and public debates when pitted against each other, thus developing the art of public speaking that has made many of our number distinguished, this deserves the highest commendation. I tell you those meetings developed the underlying principles for us. I recall Cyrus C. Carpenter, now departed, ex-Governor of Iowa; I recall my esteemed friend, Galusha A. Grow, ex-speaker of Congress; and I might go on and on. When I think of the departed ones it is with profound emotion; I am stirred to the inmost of my soul.

Don't you remember in 1854, upon those broad fields, when Horace Greeley addressed the several thousands; when the Amphyction society and the Alpha-Epsilon society, with banners floating, marched down through with bands of music, and the people from all parts of the State, in all kinds of vehicles came? That was a grand occasion; over four thousand people assembled; and this school was then the pride of Harord and the pride of all Northeastern Pennsylvania. And our closing exhibition in 1855, the last I attended, was the closing exhibition of Franklin Academy.

Now, my friends, you know how often we have walked these walks; the merry laughter of young manhood and young womanhood; you remember that. I feel upon this occasion that these are gone, and I feel on this occasion many loved ones have gone out from us, but they are with us in the spirit. And while their foot-steps are not heard any more, the orphans of our soldiers are heard, and I am glad that if we have gone out as a school that these children occupy these grounds. Now, as we go forth from here, we will think of this reunion. We will think of the friends we have clasped hands with, and whose faces we have looked into. And, my friends, this will be our last reunion upon this hallowed spot. I believe this. We shall not have another upon these grounds. But I do trust and hope that we will meet in a more glorious and enduring reunion in our Father's house of many mansions.

E. B. BEARDSLEE:

Ladies and Gentlemen and Fellow Students of Franklin Academy: It is a pleasure to meet you here to-day; to greet those that I knew in years gone by and to recall reminiscences of former days. There is also about it something that is sad. I find but very few that were with me here in '56; and during the time of the Fremont campaign. I can remember, as my friend here, Mr. Chase, suggested, that the committee would appoint some gentleman to go with a lady. I remember the time when they sent the ladies after the gentlemen, and it wasn't quite so pleasant sometimes, for the gentlemen at least, because they couldn't pick out their ladies. And I have thought of many things to-day that I have not thought of before for years; and, as I said, there is a tinge of sadness because many of those that were here in '56 are not here now, and we can all shed the tear.

MRS. M. E. WESTON:

I have been requested to give Oliver Wendell Holmes' poem, "The Boys."

Has there any old fellow got mixed with the boys?
 If there has, take him out, without making a noise.
 Hang the Almanac's cheat, the Catalog's spite!
 Old Time's a liar! We're twenty to-night!

We're twenty! We're twenty! Who says we're more?
 He's tipsy—young jackanapes, show him the door!
 "Gray temples at twenty?" Yes, white if we please;
 Where the snowflakes fall thickest there's nothing can freeze!

Was it snowing I spoke of? Excuse the mistake!
 Look close, you will not see a sign of a flake!
 We want some new garlands for those we have shed,
 And these are white roses in place of the red.

We've a trick, we young fellows, you may have been told,
 Of talking (in public) as if we were old.
 That boy we call "Doctor," and this we call "Judge;"
 It's a neat little fiction—of course it's all fudge.

That fellow's the "Speaker," the one on the right
 Mr. "Mayor," my young one, how are you to-night?
 That's our "Member of Congress," we say when we chaff;
 There's the "Reverend"—What's his name? Don't make me laugh.

That boy with the grave mathematical look
 Made believe he had written a wonderful book,
 And the Royal Society thought it was true;
 So they chose him right in—a good joke it was too!

There's a boy, we pretend with a three decker brain,
 That could harness a team with a logical chain.
 When he spoke for our manhood with syllabled fire,
 We called him the Justice, but now he's the Squire.

And there's a youngster of excellent pith,
 Fate tried to conceal him by naming him Smith.
 But he shouted a song for the brave and the free
 Just read on his medal "My Country" "of thee!"

You hear that boy laughing? You think he's all fun;
 But the angels laugh too at the good he has done;
 The children laugh loud as they troop at his call;
 And the poor man that knows him laughs loudest of all.

Yes, we're boys—always playing with tongue or with pen;
And I sometimes have asked shall we ever be men?
Shall we always be youthful and laughing and gay,
Till the last dear companion drops smiling away?

Then here's to our boyhood, it's gold and its gray,
The stars of its winter, the dews of its May!
And when we have done with its life lasting toys
Dear Father, take care of Thy children, "The Boys!"

HON W. E. MAXEY called upon, but asked to be excused.

H. N. TIFFANY:

I shall have to follow suit of our friend Maxey, and wish to be excused. There are others here that are better able to talk than I. Am glad that I am here, however, to enjoy this. (Mr. T's speech was short. But the president and secretary will not forget his letters of appreciation and sympathy.—Sec.)

J. W. TIFFANY:

I shall not decline; because when I came on this ground it was a hallowed spot. My father built this old Academy. It was here on this ground my mother led me and carried a baby on her arms. It was in that old Academy she worked for eight men. It was the home of my childhood. It was here and over these hills we played; and in after years when I came here to school I could recall the memory. As I was looking over the program yesterday and saw McCollum's name and others I remembered these scenes. Since Time took up the reins and started on her journey there never has been so much accomplished as there has been accomplished in the last one hundred years. We have lived in an age and a century that have beat all the centuries gone by. This is the century that has made a great advancement. And in it old Lyman Richardson lived. When he commenced the work he didn't commence it for the money that was in it. He carried on this school, and helped to build up the homes, and make the condition of the coming generation better than their fathers. His prayer in the morning was for God's blessing upon the children, not only of this institution, but all the country; and when he taught us he said, "Should you become doctors, don't do it for the money that is in it. If you become teachers and go out into the world to make the world better, don't go because of the money that is in it; but when you hear foot-steps coming into the school-room remember that it is a coming generation."

To our young people here let me say, Remember our Uncle Lyman. When you go out into the world try to make the coming generation better. The old school house is gone. The old store is gone. The marble front has taken its place. But I want to say that unless the moral keeps pace with the intellectual, its advancement is nothing.

REV. CHARLES M. TOWER:

I think this is one of the happiest moments that I have experienced in a long time. My birthplace was in Pennsylvania and for several years I was connected with the schools of this State as student and as teacher; afterwards as one of the pastors of the State. Since 1883 I have been a New York Stater. That has been my home; but I have never forgotten Pennsylvania; and when I come down into this State I have a feeling of gratefulness that I was a Pennsylvanian. I felt a great degree of pride when I saw Mr. Grow come up to-day, that my birthplace was within four miles of his home, and that when I was a boy I used to go down to Glenwood where Mr. Grow's home was. And when we talked this reunion up a few months ago I said, "I will make my arrangements to go down," and I have just enjoyed the day without expression, after seeing, inquiring, looking at these students a few minutes and recalling the occurrences when I was here. A few evenings ago I was thinking of all the names that were here, so that when I saw them I would know them. We have every one of us come here and enjoyed the day; and we know that the dinner was made best to us students; but we must pay for the printing of the valuable book and catalogue upon which our committee have worked so faithfully; for the badges we wear; for the Band that has so enlivened the day; for the stenographer who takes our speeches; for the many things that cost money in order to make this Reunion a success.

Moved and seconded that a vote of thanks be tendered to Mr. Matthews, the superintendent of this school, for the generous way in which he has entertained us. Carried.

On account of the inclemency of the weather the march to the cemetery was changed. The exercises were carried out at the Chapel.

Three selections were given by the "Girls' Quartette" of the S. O. S. Two cornets, an alto, a baritone. They were warmly complimented.

HON. G. A. GROW:

Fellow Students and Fellow Citizens:

This scene, these surroundings, awaken the echoes that start when Memory plays an old tune on the harp. From the crowded offices of business life we come together to-day to revel for a brief hour in the associations of the by-gone, mid these scenes frequented by our feet when we were young, and life was fresh and sweet. It is on these occasions that we bring together that which impels men on in their life careers. From the halls of this institution have gone forth men in every walk of life; and throughout almost every state in the Union men who have taken part in public affairs in all the relations of life. The generation now fast passing away has lived in one of the most eventful eras in the world's history. It began without railroad, telegraph or telephone; and to-day a whisper is heard across a continent; and the lightnings of Heaven bear the messages of peace, of love, of joy, and of sorrow around the world, in the twinkling of an eye; while the locomotive with almost lightning speed hurls the people along the great highways of trade; and machinery has belted the globe with its iron and steel bands; and the Nation receives all in the province of a higher and nobler destiny.

Your flag, christened in patriot blood in the Revolution, rechristened in the mighty conflict of this generation, floats to-day from an island in the Atlantic ocean one thousand miles from its American shores, and over a group of islands in far-off Asia ten thousand miles away. Over this vast extent of territory the sun will never rise on a master or set on a slave. You have passed through in your own country that greatest of trials that a Nation can perform, to release your sons from the curse of human bondage; and to-day the gray and the blue at the call of their country go forth shoulder to shoulder keeping step to the music of the Union. You have welded this Republic, founded by your fathers, so that no power on earth henceforth can enter it, and there will be no interest that will desire it.

What new destinies are blazed out for the nation by cannon on land and battleship on the sea? No good prophet can to-day tell. On this new enterprise let the Nation discharge its duty to a common humanity, for they are the trustees of civilization. The last rays of the setting sun scarcely fade from the hillsides of Porto Rico ere the morning sun gilds the hills of Manila and Luzon. Over this great expanse is to be carried the institution of your fathers' liberty protected by law. England, with her Magna Charta and her great institutions of literature, stretching eastward, and here the United States of America, first born of these institutions, going westward, carrying the same institutions, will some day meet in the far-off Orient, having belted the globe with the institutions of civil and religious liberty and the constitution of free government for mankind. These two great branches of the Teutonic races of the world are to carry liberty, Christianity, and civilization to one facing the rising sun, the other following the setting sun, around the globe.

Now what shall be the duties or the destinies of this people to-morrow must be left to the generation of to-morrow. This generation has discharged its duty, yea, fully and well. God Almighty in His providence has so ordained that every generation of men must perform something for the welfare of the race. This generation has performed its part; some things so worthily and some so good that Nations who buy them pay only in blood. You have bought and paid the price, and the destinies of the race are the better; though it was at an inestimable price, it is worth what it cost. To-day seventy-five millions. One hundred years ago a few people on the shores of the Atlantic ocean, with nothing but their rights on earth and their hope in Heaven. They have planted your flag so high that the world sees it to-day.

And the first question to be met is, "What is to become of China?" There dwells one-fourth the population of the globe; the empire of oldest time. Your flag floats on the Chinese sea to-day, and no nation of Europe will partition China as they did Poland. No nation in the Old World anywhere is to undertake to work out their civilization, or think upon the dividing and breaking up of this great nation without first asking the American people. And they only want China to work out her own destinies, and do it better as one nation than to be split up in three or four. When the time comes that peace reigns in the Philippine islands, and the flag of your fathers is implanted upon every foot of its soil, then will come the time for education of that people, and in the end a Republic will be established in the archipelago, and it will be the gift of the American people to civilization, our colossal Statute of Liberty enlightening the world, throwing its effulgent rays from the mountain peaks across the Chinese sea and over this empire of ancient time. This the mission of your children, to be performed by them, but with the inspirations of a heroic ancestry; each generation performing its part, and of whose deeds and achievements in peace and in war the American people to-day stand pre-eminent in behalf of the liberty of mankind.

The Americans did what no nation ever has done since the sun rose. You declared a war on one of the nations of Europe in order to save a people from extermination and starvation. And to-day the last sceptre has fallen, the last throne has crumbled; the last flag, as it were, has disappeared forever; the one flag that at one time in her history floated over more territory than any other nation; and to-day the Spanish flag has gone from Spanish soil. No more will this nation be troubled with the cries of pleading for liberty at our doors. You did this unsolicited, unexpected; a war that no one wanted, a war that no one was trying to bring on. You found yourselves confronted with this question; you met it with that determination that belongs to the American people; and in doing it you found yourselves in Asiatic waters with thousands of people on your hands that have suffered as much as these two millions in Cuba. In peace or war the generations of the American people have always met their responsibilities. No one wished this territory; no one expected it; it comes to you in the omnipotence of an all-wise and over-ruling Providence. And now you have a duty to perform as sacred to mankind as your duty to your country heretofore. Let the Republic then discharge wisely and well its obligations; for the obligation the nation owes to liberty and humanity is the great blessings the Almighty has bestowed on the American people.

Now I do not desire to detain you long my friends here in the open air. I return to you my heartfelt thanks for meeting you to-day; so many of the by-gone. But in this crowd of up-turned faces I see so few of those of the by-gone. Instinctively I feel that many will at some remembered grave kneel and wipe the weeds from the stone, each heart best knowing its own loss.

Selection by Band.

MR. JEFFERS:

Moved and seconded that we extend to this Committee who have had this in charge and have so faithfully carried it out our sincerest thanks. Carried, unanimously.

Music by band.

WATSON JEFFERS:

Moved and seconded that we tender thanks to the State Commission for their kindness and their efforts to make this day a success. Carried unanimously.

E. P. GARDNER:

One branch of service to-day has been entirely unrecognized, and although not a student, only half of me, I don't want to leave these grounds until I express at least my personal appreciation of the dinner. I have attended a great many dinners, but never one so promptly served as the young ladies served us at dinner to-day, and they have not been recognized at all. They have performed earnestly and thoroughly the work given them to do, without any hesitation, with no hurry, worry, or discord, and in my whole experience such efficient service has never before been rendered before me as this service. I want to render my thanks to these young ladies of the S. O. School.

Moved and seconded a vote of thanks be tendered the young ladies who served us at the table. Carried unanimously.

Selections by Bands.

Drill by boys of Orphans' School.

This was the regular "Dress Parade" of a military company. It attracted much attention.

The Harford Cornet Band had placed its best selections for the hour set apart for sacred service at Rev. Lyman Richardson's grave in the village cemetery. When students had surrounded his grave they intended to give Stackhouse's "Last Greeting." Prof. Hine was to read Proverbs, chapter first, so often chosen by Rev. Lyman R. in chapel worship. The loved classmate of '60, Rev. Chas. M. Tower, was to lead in prayer; followed by Kellar's dirge, "The Last Tribute." W. L. Thacher, standing by the honored grave of our teacher, was then to pronounce a brief eulogy. This was to be followed by our Band, in Chadsey's "Dearest Spot on Earth."

Many, regretting the unavoidable exclusion of this part of the program, requested Mr. Thacher to give the tribute to the audience before breaking up. But, as prepared, it was manifestly out of place, except at the grave; besides a slight to others on this portion of the program, Mr. Thacher escaped the proposal by promising to write the eulogy for the book. It is here appended:—

W. L. THACHER:

Far away beyond yonder eastern blue hills, away down in old Massachusetts, in the little village of Attleborough, only thirty-five miles from Plymouth Rock, one hundred ten years ago this month, a little child lay in his cradle, three months old. His father had just returned with the famous Nine Partners who had roamed a week over these rugged hills and had purchased four square miles of land. They had come back home for the summer.

That father had been honored by the people, by his church.

No worthier name in the old Bay State than Caleb Richardson. And this child's mother was a descendant of John Hancock. Blood will tell.

All remove to Harford. This lad, sixteen now, is already fairly educated. But he loves books and longs for more. Converted at nineteen, his religious experience, written on several pages of paper, attests his sincerity of heart.

He would enter the ministry. A journey of a hundred miles on foot, to enter an Academy and pay his way in work, ends in disappointment. He returns, marries, settles under the frowning shadow of East Hill, whose rocky sides bid defiance to man's puny labor. But, no, ambition never dies. He enters Wilkes-Barre Academy. Soon he is the principal. Three years pass. Home again, he founds a classical school, the germ of Franklin Academy. Three years of teaching but also three years of intense study. At thirty, he is an evangelist who, like the one in Bunyan's Pilgrim, hastens to save the souls of men.

Twenty years pass away. Years of hard work for God. Faithful preaching, successful soul-winning. The school at the old homestead has become an Academy. All N. E. Pennsylvania is knocking at its door. Circumstances point out duty, and duty settles him at the prime of his life as principal of Franklin Academy.

You know the rest. For twenty-five years he stood at the helm. Others won laurels as teachers, but the back-bone of Franklin Academy was the sterling common sense of Lyman Richardson. Age came on. In the restless, changing world other schools with other forms came on. The new is popular, the old is outlawed. And he shut the door of Franklin Academy with a sigh, sold the old homestead with regret, removed to the village to wait for the sun-down of life. And when they had gathered him to his fathers they wrote on this stone, "He loved his fellow men."

Prominent in the character of this man was his enthusiasm and earnestness. His early pupils testify to it. His life in the pulpit attests it. More than once have I heard his voice in yon church, tremulous with emotion, read that wonderful 9th chapter of Daniel: "O Lord, hear; O Lord, forgive; O Lord, hearken and do; defer not for thine own sake, O my God; for thy city and thy people are called by thy name." And when sweet Mary Miller died who could preach the sermon save Uncle Lyman. And what was his text? "Our Father which art in heaven."

O teacher! peace to thy ashes! Do not the sparks of life go shimmering through them while we, thy children, bend over them? Did ever a King receive truer homage than we bring thee to-day? Thou hast had a mighty influence in our life. We promise thee it shall never cease. Rest in peace till the resurrection morn. Thou shalt come forth in eternal youth. That aged form shall no more be bent with care and sorrow. May we be so unspeakably happy as to join thee at the feet of him who is the teacher of all teachers, our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

The sun was hastening down the western hills. The audience was thinning out. The greetings were over. The stories had all been told. Old school-days had been reviewed together the last time. Some tearful eyes had been seen on the grounds during the day. The last look had been given the old chapel, the last wandering over the grounds to catch from the present buildings the look of the past ones. For much was yet natural. Old Susquehanna Hall was true to life. Newark, Columbia, were there. Old Bradford was across the road, and Franklin was occupying its former place. But the bell that called us to our classes forty years ago was now an urn for flowers, in front of Rev. Allen's house. Broken, it no longer could be used.

Frank Tiffany, who handled the transportation of passengers so well, was calling for his loads. The Bands had played their last piece. Both enlivened the day; both were well complimented. Our Band (Harford Cornet) rendered twice the music listed on program. Their part in the day deserves all praise. Justice McCollum and Judge Searle, in private conveyances left for home. The former, weary, had come over for rest, not a speech. The latter, not a student, pleased us by his interest in us. Hon. Grow had granted our hearts' desire. It was fitting that he whose oratory had been listened to on this very spot sixty years ago should close the day with the last oration to be uttered for old "Franklin." And Mrs. Weston had gratified us with old-time elocutionary fire.

It was an assemblage of men and women far on in the race of life. Young people were few. Intelligence was in their faces, above the ordinary plane of life. A sense of social equality reigned through the day, regardless of wealth, religion, or politics. Justices, Judges, Congressmen, Legislators, forgot their rank and became the great common people. "The visiting could hardly stop for eating. Every one enjoyed the Reunion."

The president and secretary had hoped for many pleasant interviews during the day. They had none at all, being forced to almost rudely shake off friends on every hand.

The expenditures of this day were $225; one-half of which goes for the publication of the pamphlet-catalogue. The other half met the cost of Band, badges, stenographer, printing, postage, and hired help. C. H. Dickerman of Milton, Pa., Prof. H. S. Sweet of Harford, Judge McCollum of Montrose, Roswell Miller of New York, contributed the large amounts that saved the committee from bankruptcy.

By five o'clock the grounds were deserted. And the ceaseless flow of years that burys all things in oblivion, again resumed its course.

This list is supposed to contain the names of 152 students. The oldest one present was Lucretia Tiffany, aged 83. Next comes Mrs. Maria (Lyon) Brewster, aged 81. The youngest student present is believed to be Edith (Loomis) Howell, 47. It is known that some students did not register.

CATALOGUE.

The following pages assume to give name of every person attending Franklin Academy during its existence. Students known not to be living are marked *. Many are not living of whom we know not that fact. Residence or Post Office is given when known. Present residence is given when known. Otherwise the residence is given as indicated on old catalogues or gained from other old information. In many cases the old catalogues did not know the then present residence, and in that case put down the home of the student while attending. A few names have no residence. It could not be ascertained. The word "West" is sometimes added to a name as being a residence.

The lady student's married name follows her name, after the dash. This has been done whenever the name was known.

Abbreviations indicate profession, occupation, position, achievement, etc. These are: Tea., Teacher; Fr. Farmer; Mec., Mechanic; Eng., Engineer; Cond., Conductor; Mer., Merchant; Dag., Daguerrean; Cons., Conservatory; Grad., Graduate; Sem., Seminary; Com., Commission; Nat., National; M. C., Member of Congress; P. M., Post Master; Prof. Professor; Prin., Principal; A. M., Master of Arts; A. B., Bachelor of Arts; D. D., Doctor of Divinity; LL. D., Doctor of Laws; Att'y, Attorney; Hon., Honorable; J. P., Justice of Peace; H. of Reps., House of Representatives; S. Senate, State Senator; Gov., Governor; Reg., Regiment; P. V., Pennsylvania Volunteers. War records are made prominent. The best record known of every person is given. Quite often the person no longer fills the position noted.

All towns and Post Offices in Susquehanna County, the location of the Academy, have no county or state attached. When these are outside the county, but in Pennsylvania, the county is given. But this rule is not strictly followed. Prominent places like Carbondale, Scranton, Williamsport, etc., need not Pa. added. Places outside the State are followed by abbreviation of State, no county; as Aurora, Ill. New York is the city; N. Y. the State.

Students are placed, as a rule, in the term they first attended. Some were present five or more years. The names in any particular year do not indicate all that year's attendance; only the new students. Names having the Christian name, and again only the initial letter, that probably belong to the same person, are placed in list, lest one might possibly be omitted. Every name in all the Academy's catalogues, records, is retained. Very many have been added through letters, lists, personal information. We have sometimes doubted the right of some name to a place. But we assumed the informant's honesty, and inserted it.

Long lists by mail, a large correspondence on same, differences in catalogues and in lists sent, names often given with no clew as to term or residence, have caused immense labor and loss of time. Records of the last ten years were faulty, and five revisions were necessary before they were in shape. We have placed some additions by guess. We could not determine where they properly belonged.

The full list numbers 2175 names. Without doubt there are some mistakes. For these we shall be blamed. But those who have at least some conception of the magnitude of the task will have nothing but commendation.
